homes.me

How we work a lead. Every time.

The homes.me CRM, in the order you will actually use it. Read it once, keep it on your phone, and you will never lose a lead again.

START HERE

Four rules. The rest is detail.

If you only remember this page, you will still be one of the good ones.

Five minutes. Not ten.

A new lead is yours the second it lands — your phone buzzes and it is on your dashboard. Touch it within 5 minutes or the CRM takes it back and gives it to someone else. That is not a punishment. A lead called in 5 minutes buys; a lead called tomorrow has already spoken to three other brokers.

Write the note while you remember it.

Straight after the call, type what they said. Budget, which tower, when they fly in, who really decides. Thirty seconds now saves you the whole conversation again next week — and the CRM moves the card to Attempted Contact by itself when you do.

3

Never leave a lead with no next step.

Every open lead must have a date on it. The CRM asks you for one and you can skip it — but skipped leads land in the No next step tab, and that tab is the money you left on the table.

Only quote what is in the system.

Prices, payment plans, handover dates and sizes come from the Projects library. If it is not in there, you do not have it yet — ask, do not guess. A wrong price in writing is a problem that outlives the deal.

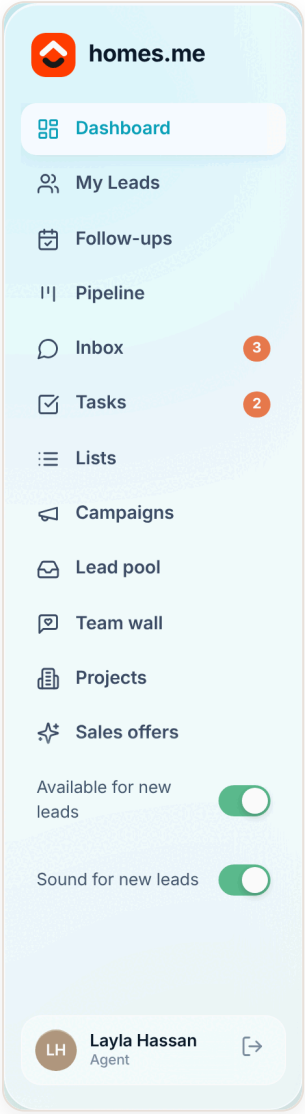

The whole job, in one line

Answer fast · write down what they said · always leave a next step.

THE SCREEN

Twelve things in the sidebar. You will use the top five every day and the rest when you need them. This is the whole map.

Dashboard	What to do today, decided for you.
My Leads	Your leads, in six tabs. Your main screen.
Follow-ups	Only what you promised for today.
Pipeline	The same leads as cards on a board.
Inbox	WhatsApp, email and SMS in one thread.
Tasks	Call backs and reminders you set.
Lists & Campaigns	Calling through a list of people.
Lead pool	Unclaimed leads. Press Claim next lead.
Team wall	The floor: wins, notices, thank-yous.
Projects	Real prices. The only place to quote from.
Sales offers	Branded offers you send to a client.

Available for new leads

The switch at the bottom of the sidebar. Off means the system stops giving you new leads. Turn it off when you are on leave — not when you are busy.

The two things at the top

The search box finds anyone by name, phone or project. The bell is leads and mentions. Add lead is for someone you met yourself.

YOUR DAY

Open the Dashboard. It has already decided what you should do.

You do not have to work out where to start. The four cards at the top are in the order that costs most if you ignore them.

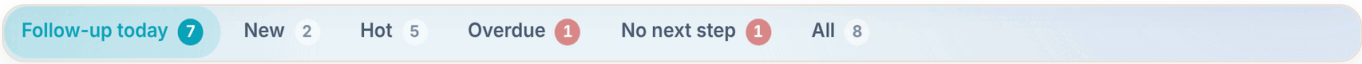

Read it top to bottom. The four cards are the work. Everything under them — your numbers, the chart, speed to lead — is the score, not the job.

Call N new leads now	The 5-minute clock is running. These go back to the pool if you do not touch them. Always first.
N follow-ups are overdue	You promised a time and the time has passed. You are already late; ring anyway.
N hot leads never called	Scored high, big budget, ready to buy — and nobody has spoken to them yet.
N leads have nothing planned	No next step. These die quietly. Decide what happens next, or close them.

MY LEADS

The number on each tab is how many are waiting. Left to right is the right order — it is not alphabetical, it is urgency.

Follow-up today	What you promised, due today. Empty by lunch is a good day.
New	Nobody has spoken to them yet. Call — do not message.
Hot	The CRM thinks these are your real buyers. Treat them like it.
Overdue	You are late. Say sorry and ring anyway.
No next step	Open leads with no plan. This is the leak.
All	Everything you own.

One row tells you five things

Name, then project · budget · phone. Then what Emir AI makes of them and their score out of 100. Then in red how late you are. The three buttons on the right are call, WhatsApp and set a reminder — you never have to open the lead to use them.

The phone number is part-hidden on purpose. Press the green or blue button instead of reading it out — that way the call is logged against the lead and you get the credit for it.

The number beside the flame

A score out of 100, worked out from what the lead actually did: whether the phone is real, whether the budget matches the project's real prices, how fast they reply, and whether they asked for a price or a brochure. 70 or more is Hot. It moves on its own as they reply, so a lead that was Weak on Monday can be Hot by Thursday — which is the whole reason to keep the notes and the messages inside the CRM.

If you only open one tab

Open Follow-up today, and empty it. Everything else on this page is a way of finding work; that tab is work you have already promised to somebody. A broker who clears it every day beats a broker with twice the leads who does not.

A LEAD JUST LANDED

You have five minutes. The clock is on the card.

When a lead comes in from Meta, the website or WhatsApp, the system picks an agent and tells them immediately. If that is you, this appears in the corner of whatever screen you are on.

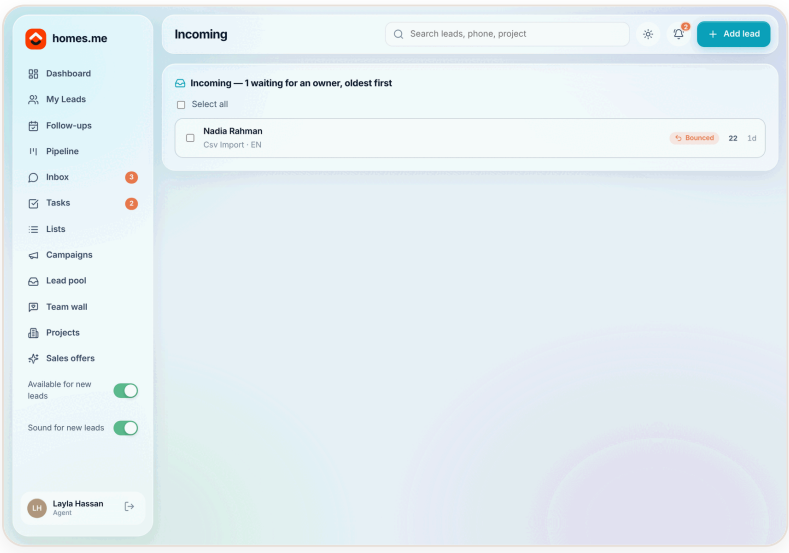

Everything on it matters

- 3:02 — what is left of your five minutes, counting down.
- The project and the budget — enough to open the call without reading anything.
- Where they came from — a Meta lead ad is colder than someone who messaged you.
- Open lead or Call — either one stops the clock. Opening is not enough on its own: you still have to speak to them.

There is a sound too. Leave it on.

What happens if you let it run out

The lead is taken off you and given to someone else, your manager is told, and the lead is marked as a missed SLA. It is not a telling-off — it is so the client gets an answer. But it is on your record, and the client has already answered another broker.

Incoming

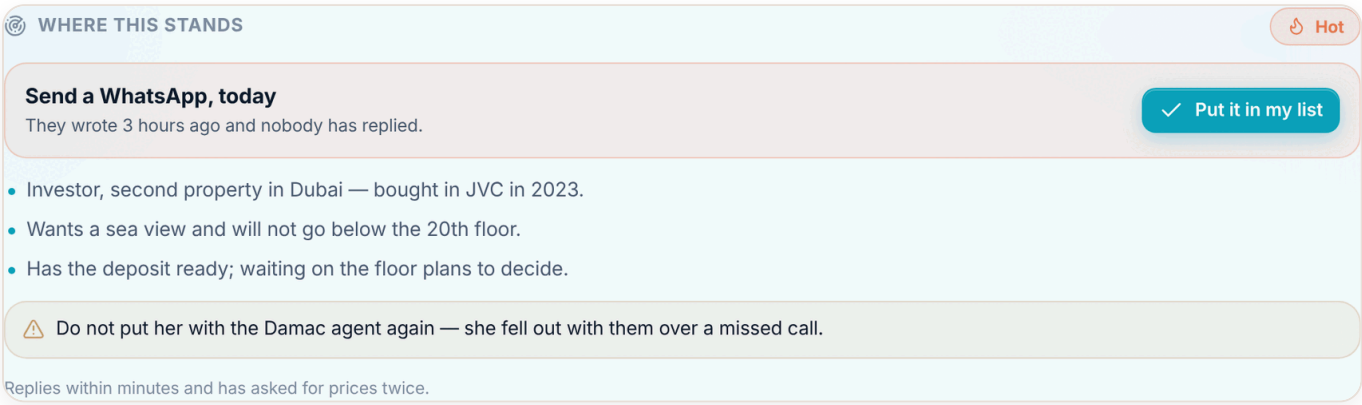

Leads that nobody has taken yet sit here, oldest first. This is a screen you want to look like this — nearly empty.

If there is a list on it, the floor is behind and anybody can pick one up.

OPENING A LEAD

Read the top panel before you dial.

Ten seconds here saves you the opening question that makes a client feel like a number. It is written from the notes, the messages and the calls already on the lead.

This is the whole history of a lead, in the shape you need it on the phone.

The box at the top	The one thing to do next, and why. Press Put it in my list and it becomes a task with a time.
The bullets	What they actually told us — budget, floor, view, timing. Say one of these back to them in the first minute.
The warning line	Something that will cost you the deal if you forget it. Read it twice.
Hot / Good / Weak	Emir AI's read on how likely they are to buy, from the real signals: budget against real prices, how fast they reply, what they asked for.
The grey line at the bottom	How they behave. "Replies within minutes" tells you to message. "Never answers before 7pm" tells you when to ring.

It is a summary, not gospel. Emir AI writes the wording; the facts underneath come from the CRM. If it says something that does not match what you know, trust yourself and fix the note — the next person to open this lead will read what you wrote.

Where it comes from

Every line is built from something somebody recorded: a note, a WhatsApp reply, a call outcome, the form they filled in. Nothing here is invented — which is also why a lead nobody writes notes on has a thin, useless panel.

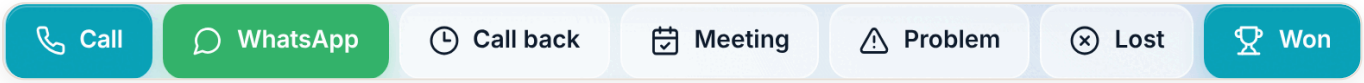

Ten seconds, every time

Read it before you dial, even on a lead you think you remember. You carry forty leads; they carry one conversation, and they can tell which of you is which.

THE ACTION BAR

Seven buttons. Each one records itself.

This row sits across the top of every lead. Use it instead of your phone's own dialler and you never have to type up what you did.

Call	Dials on your phone and logs the attempt. When you hang up it asks how it went — answered, no answer, wrong number. One tap.
WhatsApp	Opens the chat with their number already in. Whatever you write comes back into the CRM inbox, so the team can see it.
Call back	They said "ring me Thursday at six". Press this, pick the time, and it will remind you. This is the button that keeps your Follow-up today tab honest.
Meeting	A viewing or a sales-centre visit. Moves the lead to Appointment Scheduled and puts it in your calendar.
Problem	Wrong number, not interested yet, budget nowhere near. Keeps the lead honest instead of leaving it parked and pretending.
Lost	Asks why — in one tap. That answer is how the company learns which ads are wasting money, so pick the true one.
Won	Asks what they reserved. This is the one that pays you.

Why not just use your own phone? Because a call nobody can see did not happen. If you are off sick and a client rings the office, the person who picks up has to be able to read what you did. That is the whole reason this row exists.

Lost is not a failure

A lead marked Lost with an honest reason teaches the company which ads bring buyers and which bring noise. A lead left sitting in New for three months teaches it nothing and still counts against you.

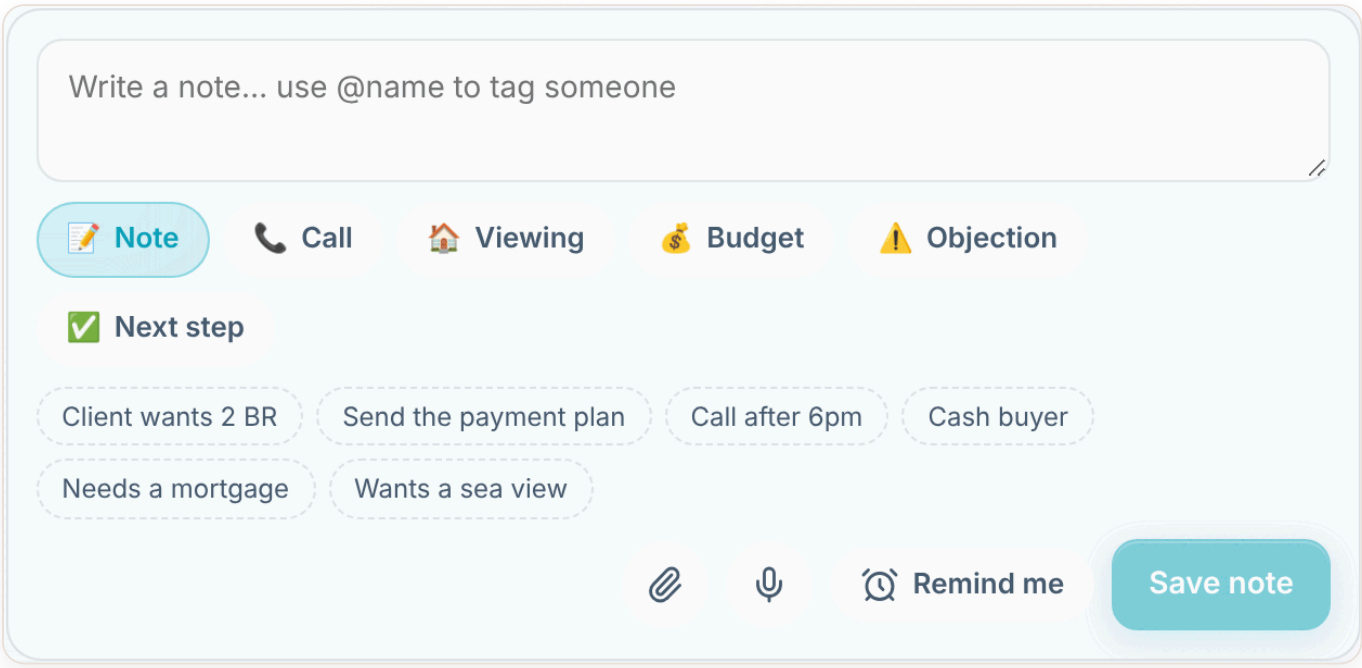

Problem versus Lost

Problem means "not now, but real" — wrong timing, budget short, waiting on a sale. Lost means finished. Use Problem and the lead stays on your list with a reason attached.

THE NOTE

This is the part that pays you.

Everything else in this handbook is buttons. This is the one thing the CRM cannot do for you, and it is worth more in a month than any other habit on this floor.

Pick what kind of note it is, write the sentence, press save. The grey chips underneath are suggestions — tap one instead of typing it.

Write what they said

"Wants 2BR, sea view, under 2.4M. Wife decides. Back in Dubai on the 12th."

Thirty seconds. In three weeks it is the difference between a call that lands and a call that starts from nothing.

Not this

"Called. Will follow up."

This tells the next person nothing, and in a month it will tell you nothing either.

Writing a note moves the lead for you

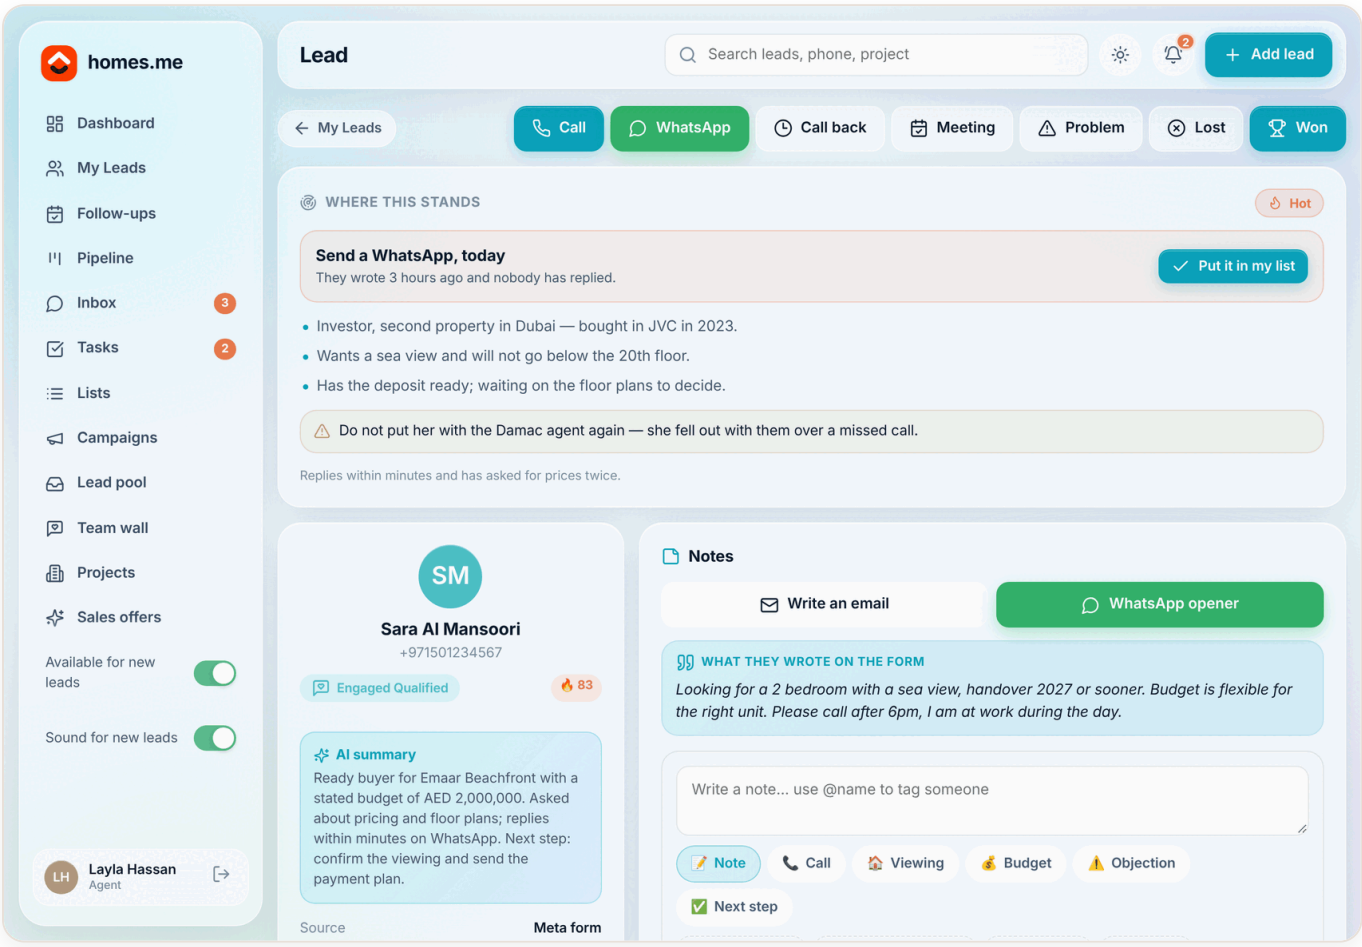

A note on a new lead moves it to Attempted Contact by itself. You tried, so the board should say so — you do not have to drag the card as well. Tag a colleague with @their name and they get a notification.

Remind me sets the next step at the same time as the note, so the lead never lands in the "No next step" tab. Use it every time and that tab stays empty.

ONE LEAD, ALL OF IT

The whole page, once.

You have now seen each part on its own. Here is how they sit together — this is the screen you will spend most of your day on.

1. The action bar across the top — call, message, book, close.
2. Where this stands — what to do next and what they told us.
3. The person, bottom left — stage, score, Emir AI's summary, and where the lead came from.
4. Notes, on the right — what they wrote on the form, then everything the team has written since. Write an email and WhatsApp opener draft the first message for you; you edit it before it goes.

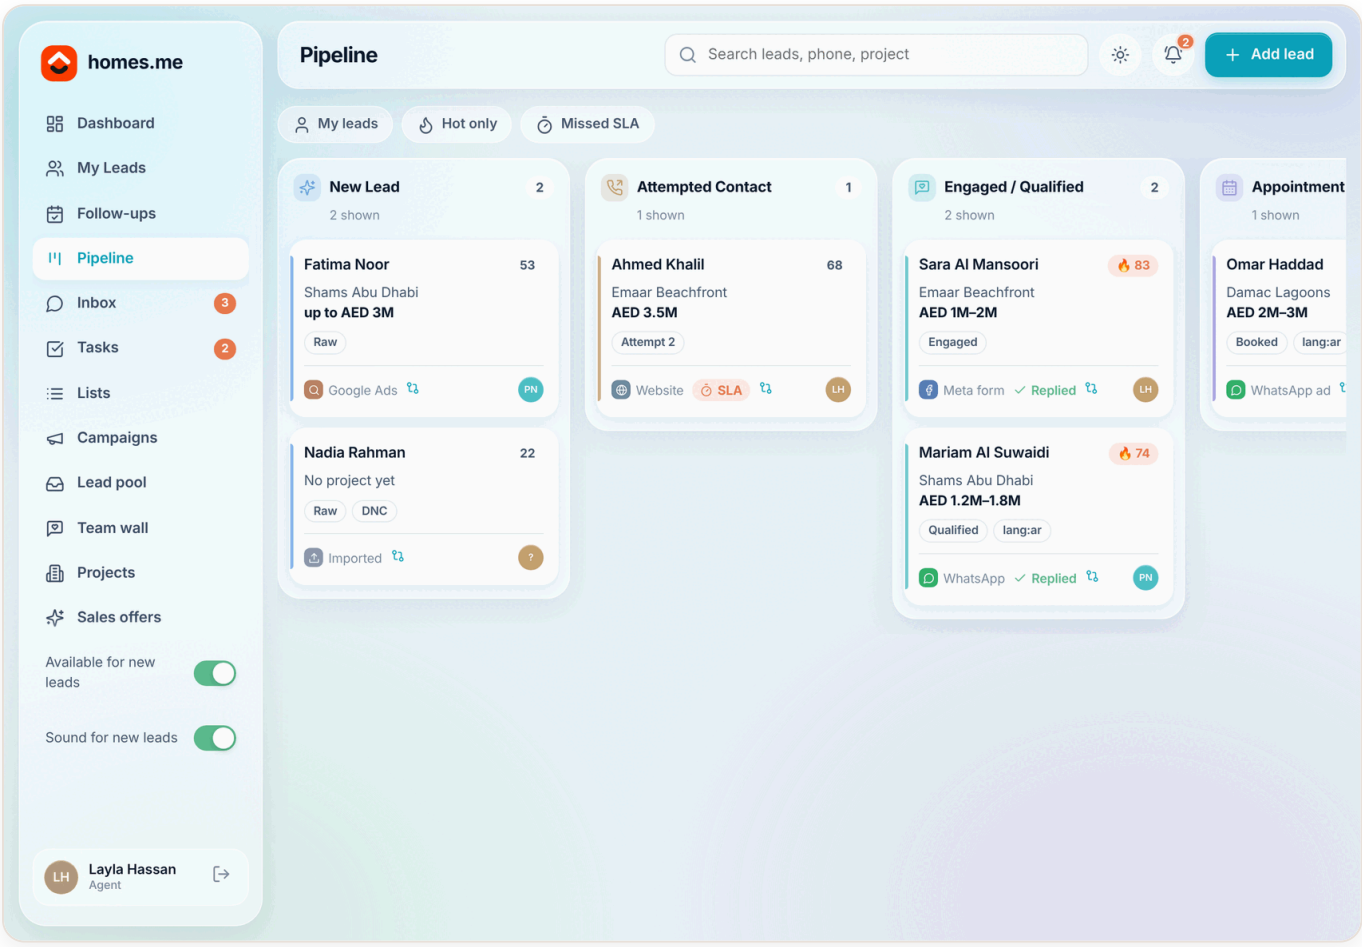

What they wrote on the form is the best thing on this page

It is in their own words, before anybody sold them anything. "Please call after 6pm, I am at work during the day" is the difference between reaching them and six missed calls. Read it first.

THE BOARD

The same leads, as cards.

Some people think in lists and some in columns. The Pipeline is My Leads in columns — nothing extra, nothing missing.

Each card shows the name, project, budget, where it is stuck, where the lead came from and who owns it. A red SLA badge means the five minutes were missed.

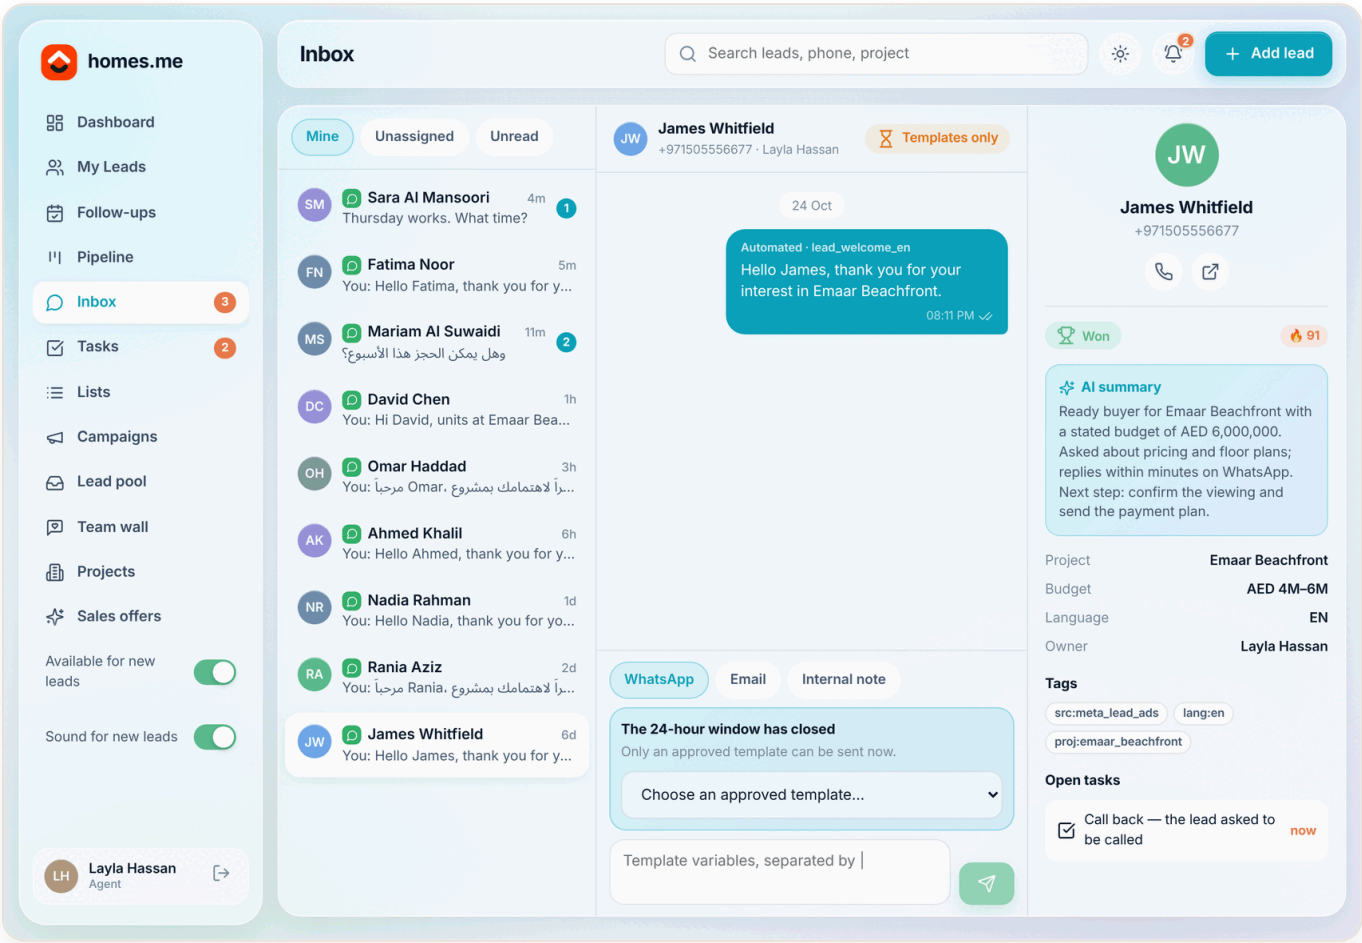

New	Attempted	Engaged	Appointment	Deal sent	Won	Lost
Lead arrives	You tried	They replied	Viewing booked	Offer out	Reserved	With a reason

Cards only move forward. If you need to pull one back, ask your manager — that is deliberate, because a pipeline anyone can rewind is a pipeline nobody believes. The three filters at the top — My leads, Hot only, Missed SLA — are the fastest way to find what needs you.

WHATSAPP

The 24-hour rule. This one is not ours.

WhatsApp — the company, not us — only lets a business write freely for 24 hours after the client's last message. After that you may only send a message Meta has already approved. Break it and the company number gets blocked.

The CRM will not let you get this wrong. When the window has closed the box changes by itself: an orange Templates only badge at the top, and a picker instead of a place to type.

OPEN

They wrote in the last 24 hours

Type whatever you like. Voice notes, photos, floor plans. Normal conversation.

CLOSED

It has been longer than that

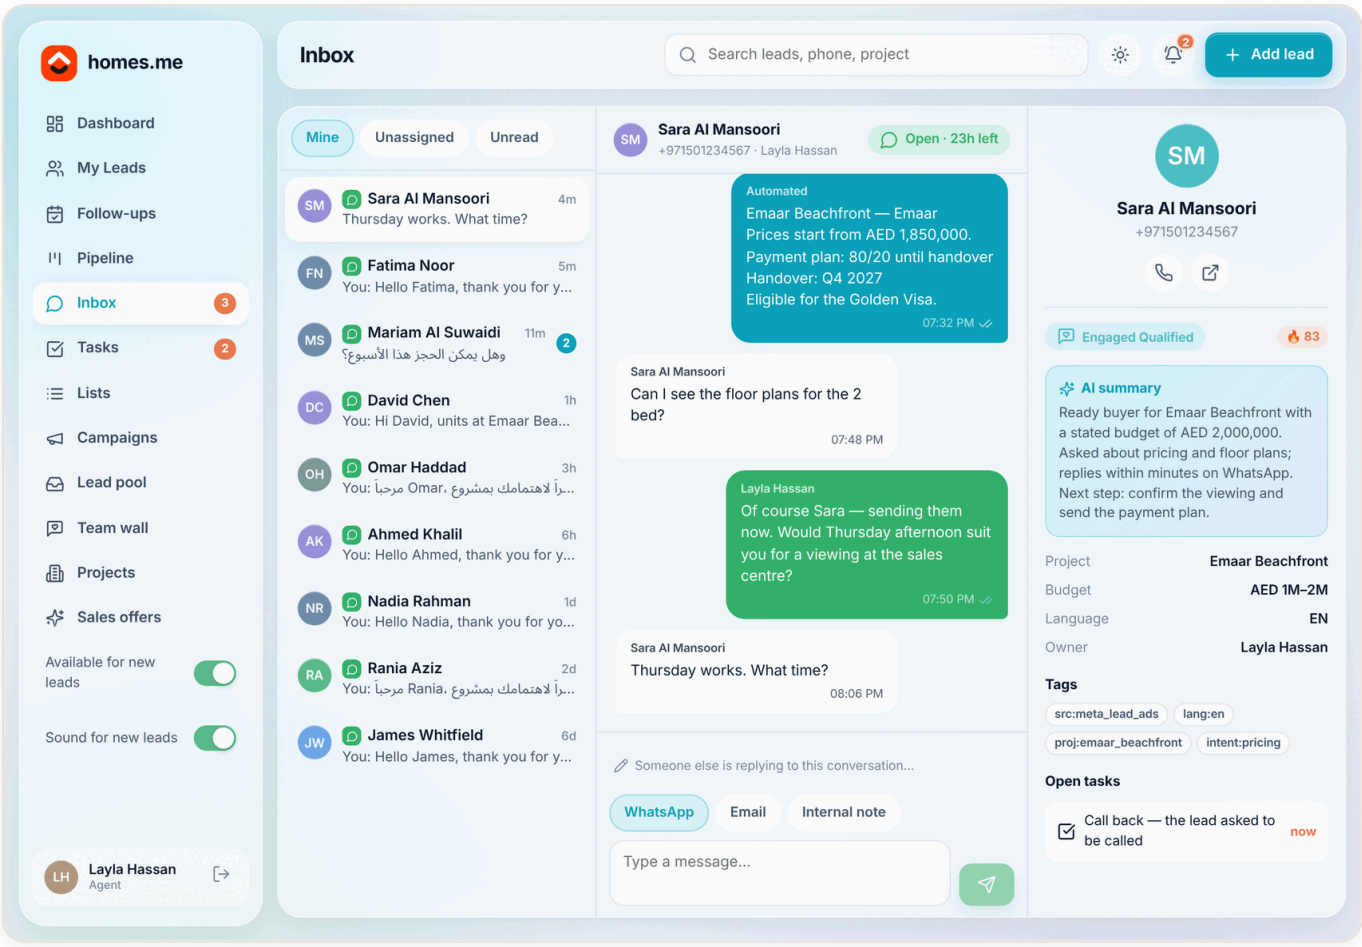

Pick an approved template. It fills in their name and project. The moment they reply, the window opens again and you can talk normally.

So the trick is simple: get them to reply. A template that asks a question re-opens the window. A template that just says "still interested?" usually does not.

THE INBOX

Every channel, one thread.

WhatsApp, email, SMS and the team's own notes about a client, in one conversation, in order. No switching apps to work out what was said.

Left: your conversations, newest first, unread marked. Middle: the thread. Right: who they are — stage, score, budget, project, tags and anything still open on them.

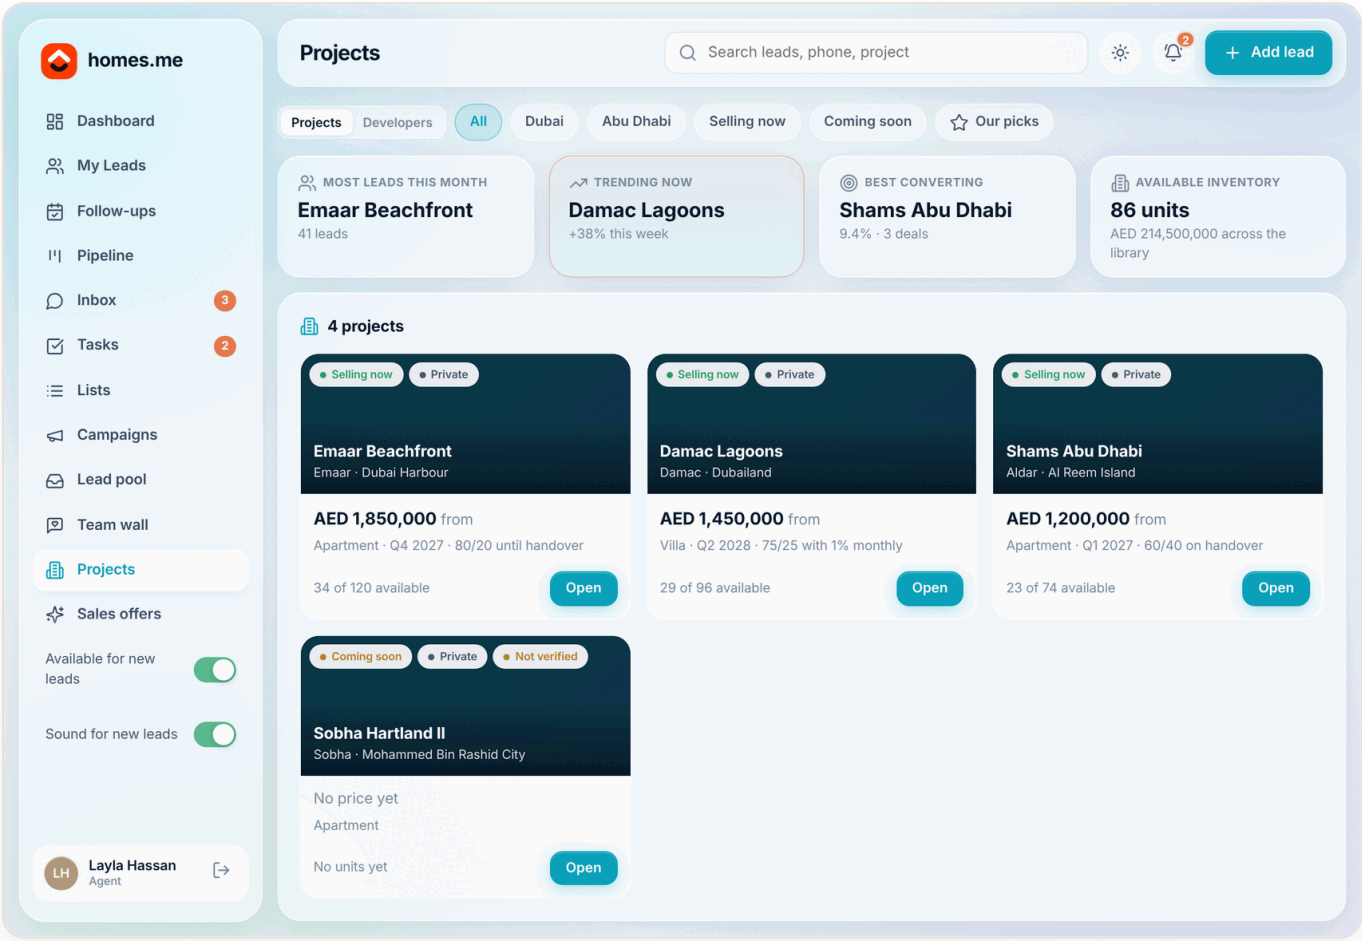

Mine	Your conversations. Where you live.
Unassigned	Somebody messaged the company and no agent owns them yet.
Unread	Waiting on an answer from you. Clear this before you go home.

Two people, one client. If a colleague is typing in the same thread you will see it. Let them finish — two agents answering the same client in different words is how a buyer decides we are not serious.

PROJECTS

Never quote a price from memory.

Prices move, plans change and units sell. Everything you are allowed to tell a client is in here, and it is the only place that is kept up to date.

Filter by emirate or status, or search in plain English — "2 bedroom under AED 2M in Dubai" works. Each card shows the real starting price, the payment plan, handover and how many units are actually left.

Open a project and you get the full unit list with prices and floors, the payment plans, floor plans, brochures, the location and what is nearby. Everything is sendable to a client as it is.

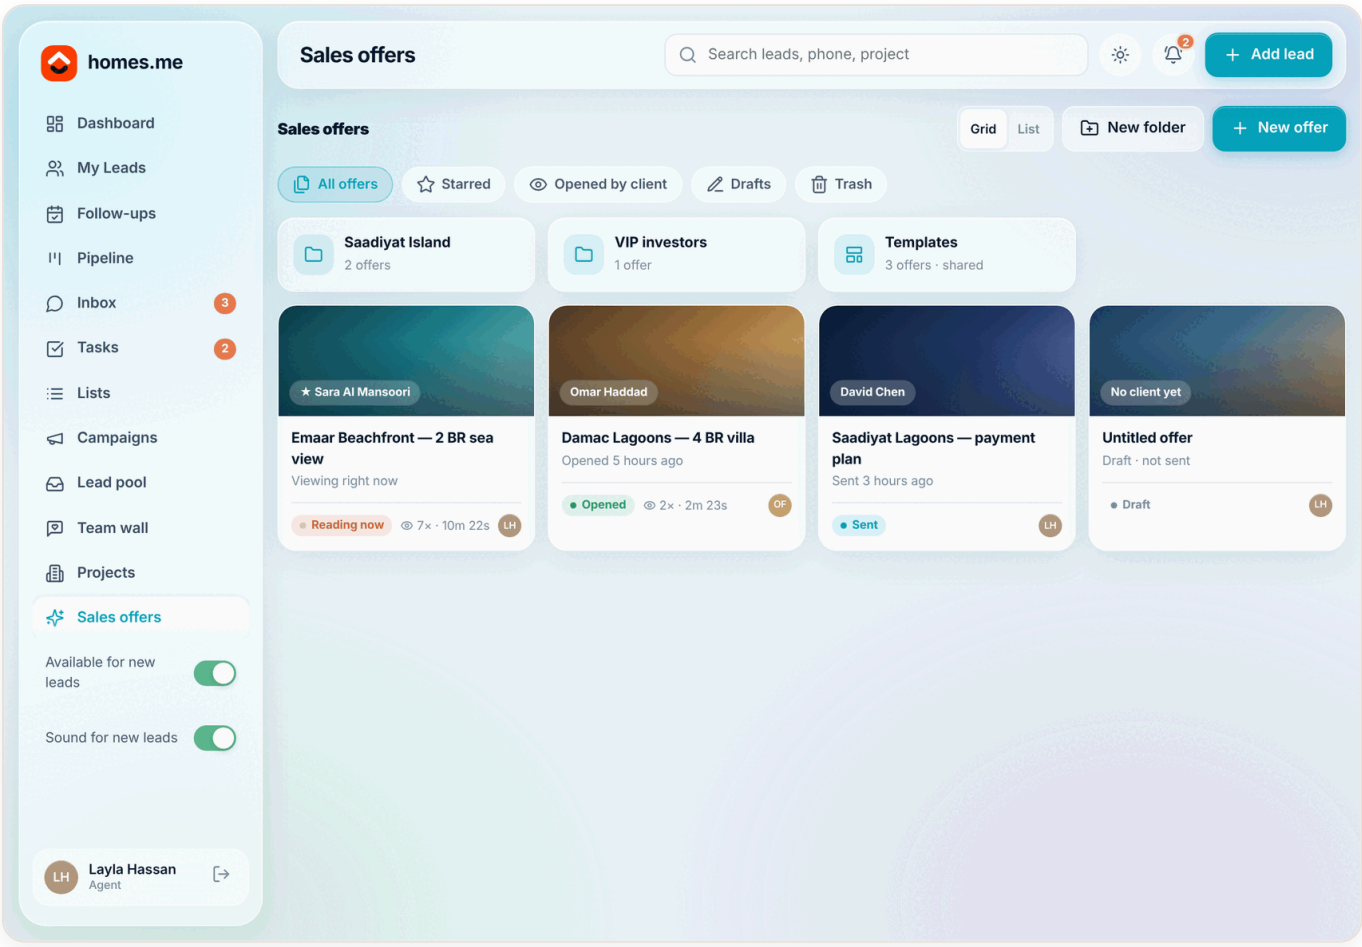

If it is not in here, you do not have it

A price you half-remember from a developer's WhatsApp group is not a price. Quote what is on this screen, or tell the client you will confirm and come back within the hour. A wrong number in writing outlives the deal.

SALES OFFERS

Stop sending brochures.

A brochure tells you nothing. An offer is a private page built for one client, with the units you picked and the real costs — and it tells you the second they open it.

This is the part worth learning. Reading now means the client has the page open as you look at this screen. 7× · 10m 22s means they have been back seven times. That is when you ring — not tomorrow.

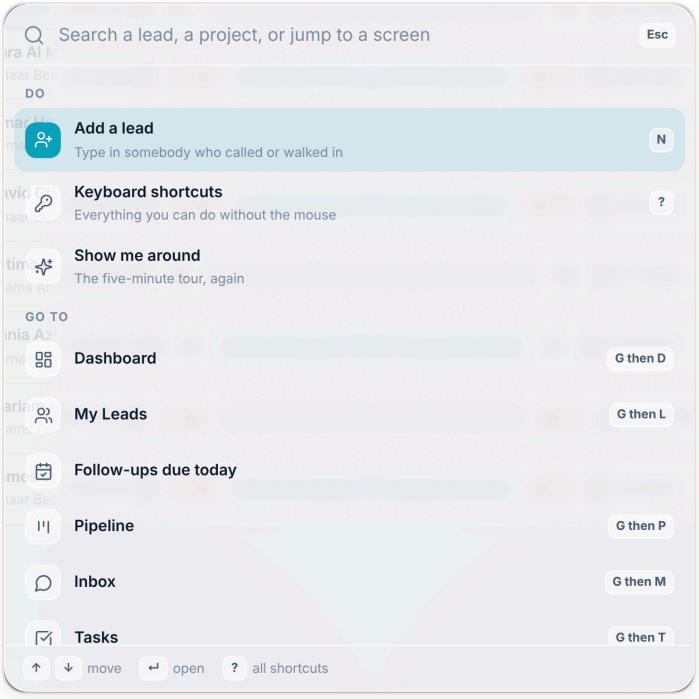

1. Pick the client and the language — English, Arabic, Russian or Hindi.
2. Pick the project, then tick the exact units you want to hold for them.
3. Emir AI drafts the words. You edit them. Nothing sends by itself.
4. Send it on WhatsApp. You get told when they open it, and again if they heart a unit or ask a question.

Offers are filed in folders like Drive, and your manager can see the team's. Put a price-hold deadline on it and the page shows the client a countdown.

GOING FASTER

Two keys you should learn on day one.

Nobody has to use these. The people who do get through their follow-ups in half the time, which is the only argument that matters.

Ctrl + K

Press it anywhere and start typing — a client's name, a project, or the screen you want. It searches your leads and the whole CRM at once, and Enter takes you there.

If you learn one thing on this page, learn this. It replaces every menu in the sidebar.

Ctrl K	Search and jump anywhere. The one to learn first.
N	Add a lead.
/	Search the screen you are on.
G then L	My Leads. Also G then D for Dashboard, G then M for the inbox, G then P for Projects.
C / W / A	On a lead: call, WhatsApp, add a note.
?	Show the whole list.

They never fire while you are typing, so a note that contains the word "call" will not ring anybody.

EMIR AI

Ask it in plain English.

Bottom right of every screen. It can read your leads, your chats and your numbers — and only yours. Ask it the question you would ask a manager.

It only sees what you see

An agent asking "how is the team doing?" gets their own numbers. A manager asking the same question gets the team's. That is not a setting anybody can change — it is enforced before the question reaches the AI at all.

Every answer links to the leads it is talking about, so you can check it rather than take its word.

Worth asking

- Which leads should I call first?
- Summarise Ahmed Khan's chat.
- Who have I not spoken to this week?
- What should I do today?

What it will not do

- Invent a price. It reads the Projects library or says it does not know.
- Show you another agent's leads.
- Send anything, or change anything, without you pressing the button.

It answers in English and Arabic. If it is not sure, it says so rather than guessing — if you ever catch it guessing, tell Emir.

Before you start calling

"Which leads should I call first?" It reads the clock, the scores and what you promised, and gives you an order. It takes about four seconds and it is better than your memory at nine in the morning.

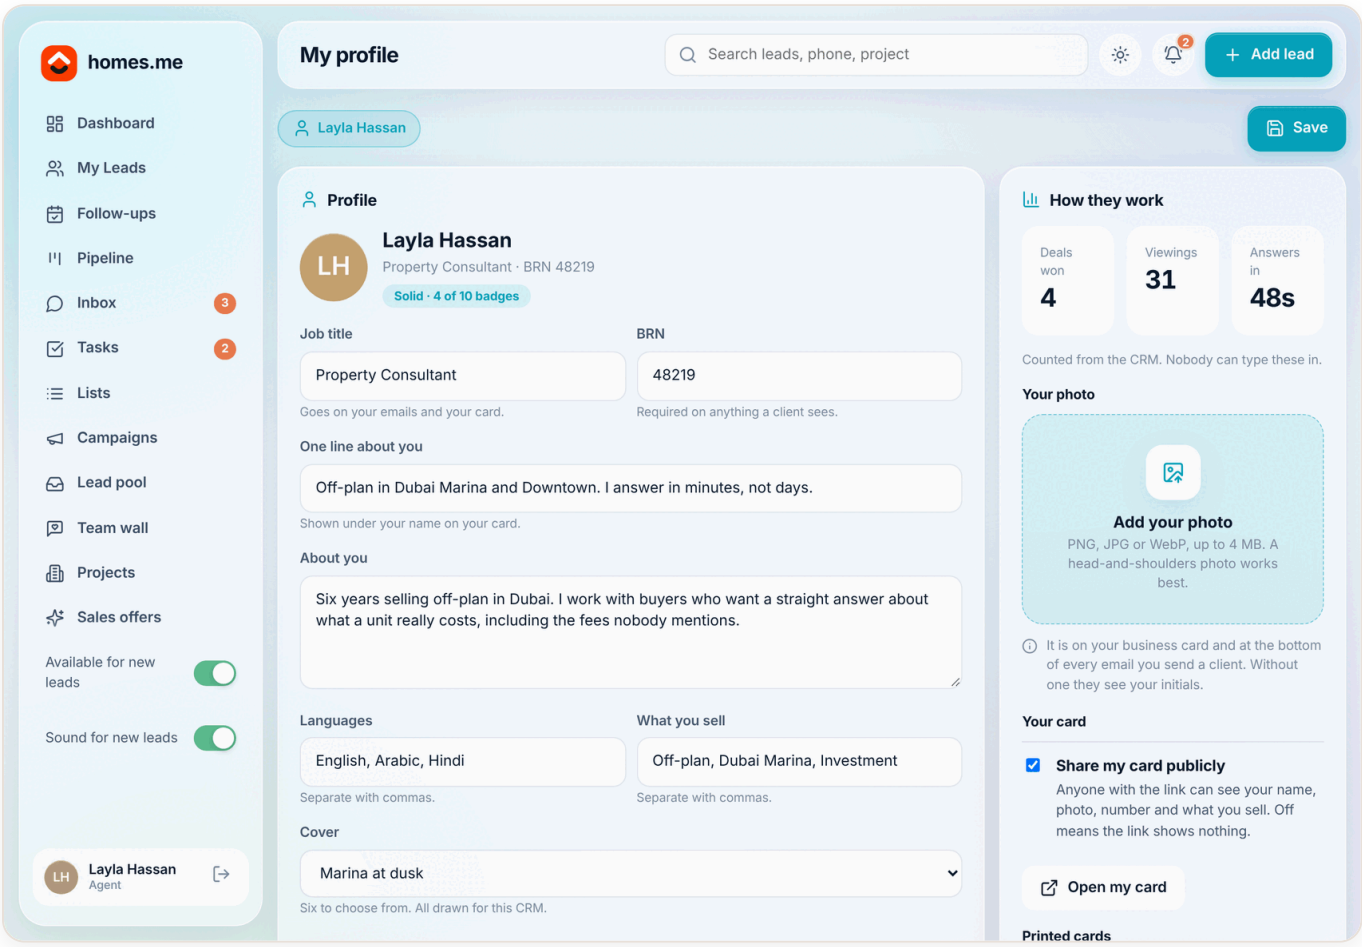

Before you ring one client

"Summarise [name]'s chat." Three lines on a conversation that might be forty messages long. Worth doing on any lead you have not touched in a fortnight.

YOUR NAME ON IT

Fill your profile in once.

Your name, photo, BRN and the line about you appear on every email you send, on your business card and on the offers clients open. Ten minutes, once.

How they work, on the right, is counted from the CRM — deals won, viewings, how fast you answer. Nobody can type those in, which is exactly why they are worth having.

It sits on your card and at the bottom of every email a client gets. Without one they see your initials in a circle, which is what a call centre looks like.

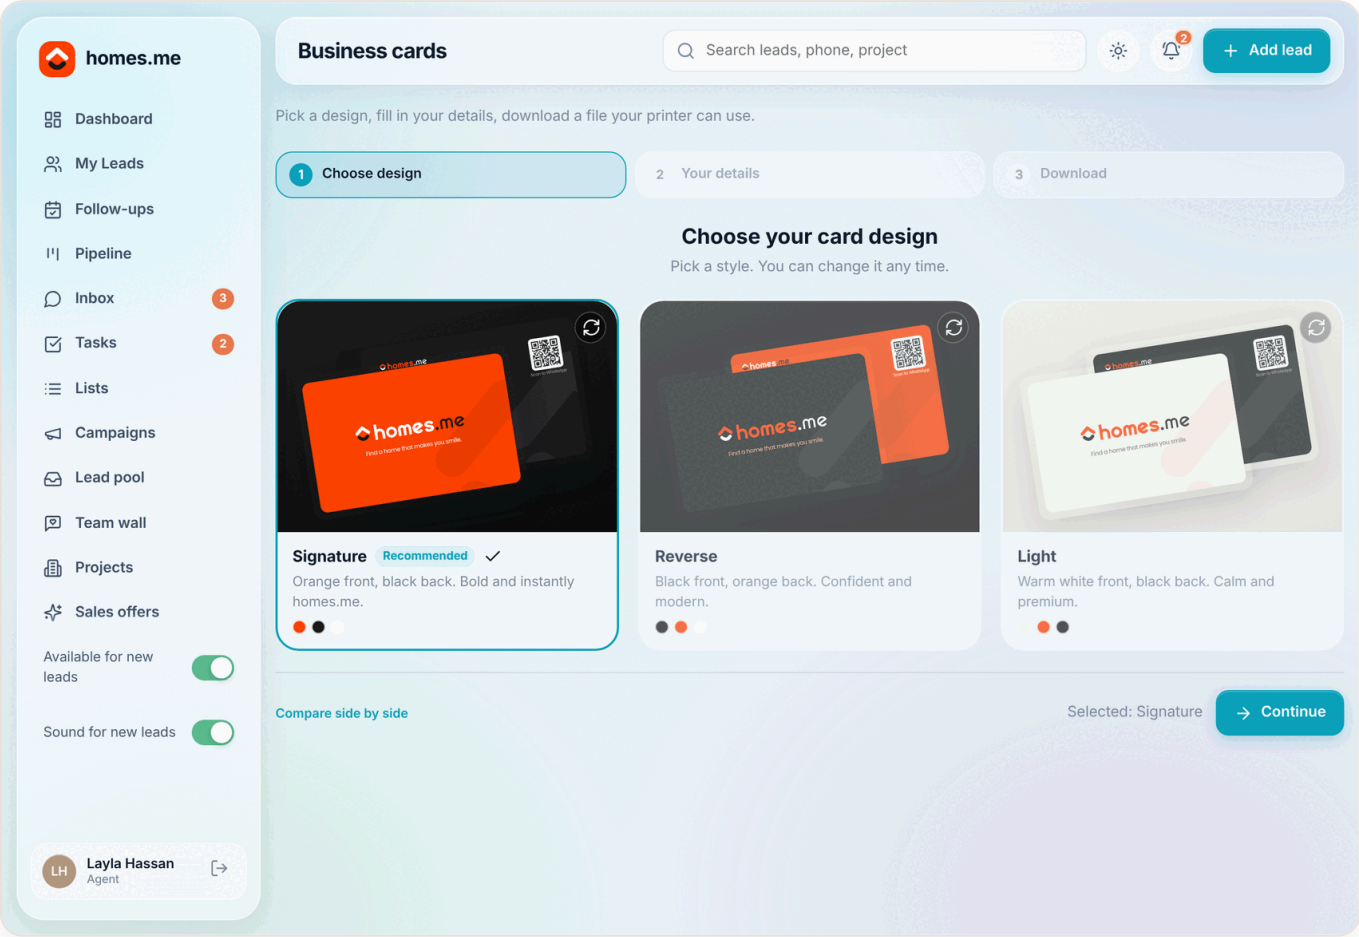

Your BRN

Required on anything a client sees. Put it in once and it appears everywhere it has to — you will never have to remember it again.

YOUR NAME ON IT

Your business card, in about two minutes.

A proper print-ready card in the company's own design, with your name on it. You do not need a designer and you do not need to ask anybody.

Three designs to choose from. Signature is the one most people pick — orange front, black back.

1. Choose a design. Compare them side by side if you cannot decide.
2. Your details. Pulled from your profile, so if you filled that in there is almost nothing to type. Check the spelling of your own name — people do not.
3. Download. A PDF for the printer, or a JPG to send on WhatsApp.

The QR code on the back opens a WhatsApp chat with you. Not a website, not a form — your chat, with the first message already written. That is the entire point of handing someone a card at a launch event.

THE FLOOR

The Team Wall.

Wins post themselves. Everything else — a developer visit, a price list landing, a question for the floor — you post yourself.

Your points, your streak and where you sit over 30 days are on the right. Points come from the work: answering fast, booking viewings, closing. Not from posting.

Say thank you

Somebody covered your client while you were out? Say so here. It is visible to everyone, including Emir, and it counts.

Your streak

Days in a row you cleared your follow-ups. Weekends do not break it. It is the single honest measure of whether you are keeping up.

LAST PAGE

Six ways to lose a deal in a system built to stop you

- Letting the 5 minutes run out. The lead goes to someone else and the client has already answered another broker.
- Keeping it in your head. If it is not in the note, it did not happen — and when you are on leave, nobody can pick it up.
- Leaving a lead with no next step. It quietly dies in a tab you never open.
- Quoting a price from memory. Prices change weekly. Use the Projects library or ask.
- Sending a brochure instead of an offer. A brochure tells you nothing. An offer tells you the second they open it.
- Messaging someone who said stop. It is the law here, and it puts the company's WhatsApp number at risk.

Three things, every day

Clear Follow-up today. Empty No next step. Ring everything in Hot.
Do that and the rest of this handbook takes care of itself.

Stuck?

Forgot your password	Ask the office to reset it — you set a new one next time you sign in.
A lead looks wrong	Say so straight away. Do not work around it.
Something is missing	Tell Emir. If ten of you hit it, it gets built.
Not sure what to do next	Press ?, or ask Emir AI.
